Clifford the big red dog coloring sheet

Maura McEvoy Even the most muted, red is one of those shades that can't help but make a statement. But that doesn't mean it always needs a neutral partner—actually some of our favorite designers to make a strong case for tying red to everything from purple to turquoise and even green. (And no, it doesn't look like Christmas!) Read on to see some color combos that will leave you completely inspired. 1 15 Charcoal Andrew Flesher's moody charcoal library gets an injection of paint through a red-orange sofa and chartreuse chair. 2 15 Purple Feeling Dare? With its purple ceiling (Delicate Petal by Pratt & Lambert) and red walls (Red Statement, also Pratt & Lambert), the living room of Katie Brown's Connecticut house is a showstopper. 3 15 Cobalt Brown chose Pratt & Lambert's Vivid Blue walls in the room, where a torn carpet showed charmingly worn red floors. 4 out of 15 White Classic red and white stripes on the walls of a room designed by Alessandra Branca. 5 out of 15 Olive Greens as proof that red and green don't always have to say Christmas, look no further than Mackay Boynton's Texas cottage library. The walls are painted Sherwin-Williams's Relentless Olive. 6 15 Cornflower Blue Red, White and Blue is always on trend, as seen in a boy's Manhattan bedroom designed by Miles Redd. The red outline lends a graphic edge to a hand-painted faux-bois wall cover, he says. 7 of the 15 black and white Manhattan apartment designed by Nick Olsen is in red. First: the lobby, where black, white and gray marble floors lend a graphic appeal to the lipstick-red lacquered walls and ceiling. 8 15 Navy Bedroom, dark navy walls ground in a Moroccan-inspired bed. 9 15 color palettes inspired by vintage Yves Saint Laurent fabric. If someone said, My living room is tomato red, gray, white, coral, grape purple and lemon yellow, you'd think they were crazy, says Olsen. But the fact that you can go from one room to another and see the link allows you to play colors that are not part of the larger scheme. 10 15 Teal Blue Saturated Colors balance the strength of architecture, says Janie Molster of this 1700 Virginia study, in which red curtains hang on the walls of Benjamin Moore's Mill Spring Blue. 11 15 Bronze A custom bronze paint ceiling takes this living butler's pantry designed by Jim Dove to the next level. 12 15 Aqua Mark D. Sikes ran horizontal stripes with red braided trim up aqua walls and a matching settee at this dramatic and glamorous Manhattan entrance. 13 of 15 Purple elsewhere in an eclectic apartment, pale purple walls (Benjamin Moore's misty Lilac) lighten the bold red sofa and leopard-print rug. 14 15 Off-White Swedish summer home decorated with Marshall Watson, traditional Falun red lines behind the living room with creamy built-in. Of the 15 Igiwinkles, 15 have a soft, sweet companion red-and-cream Kinnicutt wallpaper by Sister Parish is the Bay Area home of Chloe Warner. Spruce Pets / Camryn Rabideau We bought a LupinePet Dog Collar so our reviewer could put it to the test for her dog. Keep reading our full product overview. As you browse through stylish dog collars, you can no doubt come across the LupinePet Dog Collar, which comes in a number of collars, patterns and sizes. These products are especially popular in New England because they are made locally in New Hampshire! However, as with any purchase, you're probably wondering if the product's construction measures up your look—are these collars durable? Can they stand pulling your dog? We were thinking the same thing, so we tested the LupinePet collar on Addy, our 6-

month-old golden retriever, who is always happy to help with product testing in exchange for some cookies. That's what we decided. Spruce Pets / Camryn Rabideau The main complaint about LupinePet's collars must be a brand of fun designs. There are about 20 original patterns, including motifs of flowers, geometric patterns, turtles, paws prints, hearts, and more. The company offers simple colors, holiday designs and micro-batch designs as well. You can also choose between three collar widths – 1/2 inch, 3/4 inches and 1 inch – to find the perfect look and match your poop. If you like to coordinate, the brand sells matching straps, harnesses, and even ID tags. Need a leash? Check out our recommendations on the best dog straps. We choose a 3/4-inch collar rainsong, a vibrant blue, green and purple pattern that we thought would look pretty against Addy's blonde fur, and we weren't disappointed! Bold colors really popped up against her coat, making her look like a small fashion icon. Plus, the patterns are actually woven into the product so they don't fade or wear out over time. The main attraction of LupinePet collars must be the brand's fun design. The collar itself has a simple design. It is made of woven nylon welded stainless steel D-ring, where you can attach strap and/or ID tags. This clamps closed the quick-release plastic lock, and we found it was easy to put on and take off. Given that we usually let Addy hang out naked when she's inside, we certainly appreciate the collar, which is quick and easy to add. Spruce Pets / Camryn Rabideau LupinePet Dog Collar has bare bones as collars go. While other options include upholstery and rounded edges to ensure the collar is comfortable for your pooch, LupinePet products are simple and easy. They're made from one of the nylon strips, and frankly, it's not the nicest material. Addy is neatly thick coat, so the collar never seemed to bother her-even when she was pulling her strap. However, if your pooch has a thin coat or sensitive skin, we can see how this collar can irritate him. One good thing we noticed is this collar dries quickly due to its nylon construction. Addy loves And even when he got it soaking wet, the collar dried out for half an hour or so. Plus, the colors didn't run or stain her fur-problem we've encountered with other cheap products. If your pooch loves water, keep him safe in one of the best dog life jackets. Spruce Pets / Camryn Rabideau This is not the first LupinePet Collar Addy is worn. When he was a teeny puppy, we used a 1/2-inch LupinePet Collar on top of him, and one of the best aspects of the product was that it was several inches of adaptability. We were able to use his first collar through his big growth spurts, about the age of 12 weeks to 6 months. While most collars only adjust an inch or two, LupinePet collars have several inches of extra material, making them ideal for growing puppies. With her new big girl collar, we went with a 13-22-inch model, and it suits her perfectly. He's only 6 months old, so he can still make some grow left, but we're sure this collar will suit him when he's grown up. The company offers a total of nine sizes that fit even the smallest and largest dogs with a neck anywhere from 6 to 31 inches! Plus, as we mentioned above, you can choose from three collar widths to find the perfect fit. While most collars only adjust an inch or two, LupinePet collars have several inches of extra material, making them ideal for growing puppies. There's no denying that Lupine Adjustable Dog Necks are well done. The materials are of high quality and the stitching seems very secure-collar we tested not to budge, even if Addy did his worst pulling. Plus, the company offers a lifetime warranty, and it replaces the broken, even if your dog chews it. This is how a certain brand is for your product! That being said, they're not heavy-duty collars. If you have a strong dog, we recommend a collar that is thicker and has more strengthening. However, the average puppy, LupinePet collars, is a great no-frisks option. One of the best things about this collar is its affordable price. These stylish, well-made collars retail for between $10 and $30, depending on the pattern and size. The model we bought with Addy costs just $12, which we believe is an invincible value product that it'll transfer for years to come. Spruce Pets / Camryn Rabideau EzyDog Neo Dog Collar: If you're looking for heavier duty collar accessories, EzyDog Neo Collar, which we also tested, fits the bill. This model has a thick and rugged layer of padded neoprene, reflective trim, hook-and-loop reinforcement sizer, separate ID clip, and more. It doesn't come in as many patterns as the LupinePet collar, but it's only a little more expensive. Soft touch skin padded dog collar: Want your dog to look like a million bucks? Soft Touch Leather Collar We watched is an incredibly luxe option that is still surprisingly affordable. The skin looks high-end, and the interior is lined with upholstery your dog is always comfortable. However, it is harder to put and take off than the LupinePet product, and it costs more. Read more reviews of the best dog collars. Final verdict yes, you love LupinePet collar! We think everyone would be happy with LupinePet's dog collar. Beautiful, vibrant patterns are the main selling point for these collars, and while they are not super heavy goods vehicles, we think materials and construction are of decent quality. Quality.
